How Hazel Miller Helped CW & Twenty Hands High Take Off

NATHALIE BARET | FEBRUARY 23, 2023 | 8:00AM

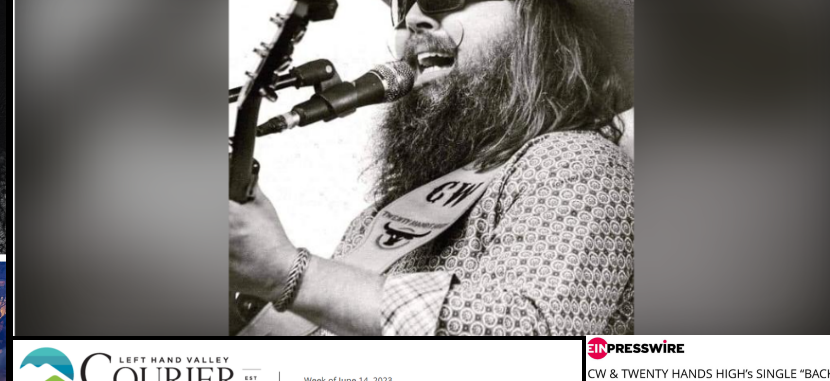

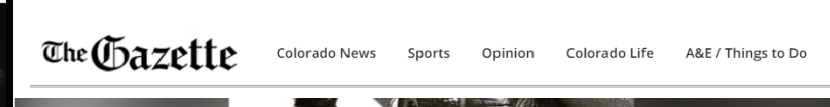

The band has performed 300 shows in the last two years. CW & Twenty Hands High

During one eventful night in 2016 at a bar in Morrison, Chad Wooten had a serendipitous encounter with Denver music icon Hazel Miller.

The lack of a fan base didn't stop Wooten from walking into bars and venues and pitching his band to promoters. "Early on, when I would tell people, 'Here is what we're going to do...,' I would get an eye roll," he recalls. "I think they thought I was just another lead singer talking a big game. But I persevered. I would tell them, 'If you give me one shot, with the crew I have assembled, we'll blow the roof off this joint. If you don't think we're good, you don't ever have to have us back.'"

CW & Twenty Hands High returns to rock & talk for their sophomore year

Country music icon Hazel Miller helped CW & Twenty Hands High take off

CW & Twenty Hands High will make their debut on the red carpet at the end of this month, at the 2023 Country Music Awards in Nashville. The annual event features the award winners with special guest appearances and performances from some of the genre's biggest acts. Some of the past winners of the award are given the title "Hall of Fame" artist. Hazel Miller, who hosted the 2015 album, "Gotta Be Me," was named "Male Vocalist of the Year" that year and again in 2018. To
